This annual EFMP Resource Guide features military and community resources that support Exceptional Families. This guide is not exhaustive, so if you don't see something you are looking for, visit our EFMP office or contact your EFMP Family Case Worker for even more resources available to you and your family! EFMP is here to help find the supports you need!

Kūlia i ka nu'u - This is the value of accomplishment and achievement. The literal translation for kūlia i ka nu'u is "Strive to reach the summit." Those who demonstrate this value continually pursue improvement and personal excellence. For them, the most satisfying competition is with themselves: They consider their life and everything within it to be a work in progress, and they enjoy the effort.

Co-regulation:

Helping others navigate big emotions

Co-Regulation is a tool we can use to assist those having difficulty managing their feelings and emotions by developing warm responsive relationships, creating a safe supportive environment, and coaching or modeling self-regulation skills. But before a parent or trusted adult can help a child or anyone else, they need to understand and be aware of their own emotional skills and limitations.

We must be able to regulate our own emotions in difficult moments to help children or others gain these same skills to teach them to self-regulate. By consistently practicing co-regulation, parents and other trusted adults foster and teach self-regulation skills in kids. Self-regulation skills include identifying emotions, self-soothing, looking at a situation from another's perspective, waiting/taking turns, problem solving, and so much more. Through co-regulation, we can help others learn to manage their own stress, resist immediate gratification, plan ahead, problem solve, adapt to change, and take healthy risks.

First, pause and regulate your own emotions, such as by taking a deep breath. It's important to remember to stay calm because emotions are contagious. Next, validate the other person's feelings by using supportive words, observe their response, and then decide how to respond next, whether it be with a few reassuring words or non-verbally such as a gentle touch. Sometimes being silent but physically present, is all the other person may need in the moment. Support them in calming down by modeling or offering calming strategies, then talk when they're ready.

Co-regulation takes practice, and we may sometimes feel our own self-regulation skills aren't where it should be. It's important to have a growth mindset and understand that regulation is something we can all work on by being more mindful of our own emotions and responses.
